The retail sector in West Michigan remains strong within the prime retail corridors, with several new retailers entering the market and new retail construction taking place.

The near Downtown areas are experiencing retail growth, highlighted by two significant grocers that will open in the city. Gordon Food Service will open an urban format store in Diamond Place, which is a new mixed-use development in the Michigan Street corridor. Meijer will open its Bridge Street Market on Bridge Street just west of US 131, which will be Meijer’s first small-format grocery store. Both stores are expected to open in the fall of 2018.

On the suburban retail front, there are several multi-tenant buildings under development. These properties have experienced strong lease-up with national tenants. Sierra Trading Post and Ashley HomeStore are new to Grand Rapids and have each opened within the 28th St. SE corridor.

West Michigan continues to follow the national trend of growth in the restaurant sector in the Fast Casual and Quick Service Restaurants categories, as well as seeing a resurgence of Casual Dining. There are several out of market chains, yet to be announced, that plan to open in Grand Rapids later this year.

On a national retail basis, it is no secret that the retail landscape is changing. With the surge in e-commerce changing the shopping habits of many consumers, retailers have been forced to re-think their long-range plan in order to thrive in this changing market. You don’t have to look too far to find a list of well-known retailers who have closed their doors in 2018.

The retailers who are well-capitalized and effectively addressing the omni-channel retail experience for its clients are best positioned to weather the changing retail environment. In addition, many national retailers have employed some combination of adding new locations, updating current stores, and relocating existing stores to more favorable locations, in order to remain well positioned to meet the needs of consumers.
